Born in Los Angeles in 1934, William Carter majored in the Humanities Honors Program at Stanford University, from which he graduated in 1957. Moving to Berkeley, he became engrossed in photography and subsequently became a professional photographer, writer, and editor.

Carter moved to New York in 1962, where he worked as an editor at the book publisher Harper & Row, and as a freelance photographer. From 1964 to 1966 he lived in Beirut, Lebanon, handling photojournalistic assignments for New York agencies.

Based in London from 1966 to 1969, Carter continued to freelance for a variety of worldwide clients. He returned to the San Francisco Bay Area in 1969 for a two-year project: roaming the back roads of the Far West to produce Ghost Towns of the West, a bestselling Sunset pictorial book.

He followed this with a volume on America's prairie heartland, Middle West Country (Houghton Mifflin, 1975), and with Preservation Hall (W.W. Norton, 1991), detailing Carter's long, passionate association with the music and musicians of New Orleans. A clarinetist, he appears on a dozen traditional jazz albums.

By 1990 Carter's photography was moving from the printed page to gallery walls. This fulfillment of long-held personal values inspired a fifteen-year project photographing the nude, resulting in the publication of his Illuminations (1996).

Continuing to travel and photograph, and to revisit his earlier work with new eyes, William Carter lives near San Francisco with his wife Ulla Morris-Carter.
